

ShuckerPaddy's Matchmaker Questions

Lisdoonvarna, is a small Irish town in the West, with a great tradition of matchmaking. To this day, the month of September is set aside for festivals and get-togethers.

As the stories go, the Matchmaker was a person of a certain age, in the town that knew the family history of most of the folks living there, and away. Back in the day, there wasn't as many social outlets as today, for young adults to meet each other.

When it we time, parents would introduce their eligible child to the Matchmaker, stories told, and notes written into the Book. Then the matchmaker would go about his business until he thought of an appropriate match. The families were then called to meet each other and the match was made.

In that tradition, I am offering my version of a matchmaking service. As an OysterShucker of a certain age, I've been witness to it all - first meetings, first dates, hookups, engagements, weddings, adulterous evenings, and divorce parties. I meet lots of folks across the bar so when I built The Ceili Cottage, I thought this would be fun.

I wrote the following questionnaire, to help me learn a bit about yourself, and others.

I will have a meeting with you and go over the questions, and add in my own notes and a photo or two to jog my memory.

At no time, will your information be passed, or used by anyone else but for the purposed of matchmaking.

I will put all of the information into my book, and when I think of an appropriate match, I will contact each party, and arrange a meeting at The Ceili Cottage. The rest is up to you. I can only introduce (and maybe lay in a few suggestions here and there)
